

HUNTSMAN BUSINESS

BUILDING THE BRIDGE OF TRUST

What do Lego, Rolex, Ferrari, Bosch, Harley-Davidson, Canon, Adidas, The Walt Disney Company, Microsoft, and Sony have in common?

They are the world's ten most trusted brands. Why? Because each has an excellent reputation built upon decades of hard work. Through their existence, they have had a laser focus on creating great products and happy customers. As a result, their reputation precedes them, which builds trust in these companies and their offerings.

Have you ever wondered how loyal your customers are to your business, brand, product/service? And how likely are they to recommend your company to a friend/colleague?

Net Promoter Score (NPS) is one of the most popular tools to measure customer experience and loyalty. It is a market research metric that takes the form of a single survey question, asking respondents to rate the likelihood they would recommend a company, product, or service to a friend. Then, using a scale between -100 and +100, it categorizes responses to create a consistent benchmark for each company that is easy to compare against competitors.

Net promotor scores are relevant to every business and category, and they are relatively easy to calculate.

The survey question asks, "Based on your experience, how likely are you to recommend (Company) to a friend or colleague?" Using a 1 to 10 scale, where ten is highly likely to recommend, and one is highly unlikely to recommend, please choose your response.

Depending on how a customer responds, they're grouped as either promoters, passives, or detractors. Promoters score 9 or 10 and are extremely happy with their customer experience, often spreading positive word of mouth about a company. Passives give a 7 or 8 and aren't unhappy with their experience but aren't singing praises to others either. Detractors give scores between 0 and 6, and they've often had a bad experience and need some issue to be addressed before they start spreading negative word of mouth.

NPS is calculated by subtracting the percentage of detractors from the percentage of promoters, giving a score somewhere on a scale of -100 to +100.

Here is an example of how 100 customers responded to the survey question:

Score 10 or 9 = 50 customers (Promoters)
Score 8 or 7 = 30 customers (Passives)
Score 6 or below = 20 customers (Detractors)

The Net Promoter score is simple math: % of Promoters – % of Detractors. In this example, the NPS = 30. (50%-20%). The hope is that your score is in the positive range, meaning you have more promoters than detractors.

Here is a sample of Net Promoter scores for some of the best-known brands and companies so you can see how they compare: (source: <https://customer.guru/net-promoter-score/fortune-500>)

Companies use net promoter scores to benchmark, self-evaluate, and identify their biggest competitors. When done consistently over time, it creates a tracking tool to help marketers understand how brand perception changes in the marketplace.

TRUST AND TRUTH

Marketing isn't about making a bunch of noise to get attention. Marketing isn't about doing outrageous antics (unless you are a Kardashian, and that's a whole different book to write!). Marketing is the most critical function in business. Good marketing drives sales. Bad marketing wastes dollars and resources. Many business owners think that anyone who is reasonably intelligent can take over marketing. How hard can it be?

As I hope you now realize, marketers are like concert pianists. Sure, anyone can sit at the piano and bang the keys to play chopsticks, but only a skilled pianist can make good music. So likewise, marketers make the music of business. They write the song (brand positioning) and develop brand communications so that every part of the business is singing the same tune from the same hymnal.

Marketers need a strong moral compass always to tell the truth. Trust = Truth over Time. Truth = Trust. The synergy is inseparable. Trust is the emotional connection every brand, every company, product, and service should focus on developing. When a consumer trusts a brand, there is no stronger bond. Trust comes from three things – a consistent experience, offering real customer value, and a competitive difference that makes your product/service stand out as different, better, and special.

Trust equates to sales. Trust creates reflexive purchases when a customer is blind to the competitive products and reflexively reaches for your product/service. They only have eyes for you!

Our branding objective is simple: how does our product/service fit into our target customers' lives in a way that will make their life better? Business success will follow when we accomplish this objective, as customers will see your product/service as the ONLY solution to their needs. In other words, they TRUST you!

WRAPPING UP THE DISNEY WAY

Disney theme parks train their employees to offer impeccable customer service – to make it the “happiest place on earth” for every guest.

As we come to a close, I'd like to share a few quotes from Disney movies that align with the Disney Way.

In the movie “Mulan,” the Emperor said, “The flower that blooms in adversity is the more rare and beautiful of all.” Sometimes a customer has a complaint. But, handled well, that moment of misery becomes a moment of magic. And if handled exceptionally well, the customer may have even more confidence in your brand because of how you dealt with the situation.

Eeyore once said, “A little consideration, a little thought for others, makes all the difference.” Put yourself in the customer's shoes. Show sympathy, empathy, and consideration. It will both build and strengthen the relationship with your customer.

And let's end with a quote from the very chatty Captain Jack Sparrow, who said, “The problem is not the problem. The problem is your attitude about the problem!” Attitude is everything. At work and in life, we are faced with problems every day. It's the same for our customers. An angry customer can be turned into a loyal evangelist with the right attitude – a helpful attitude.

Brand management is at its very core, turning customers into evangelists!

I hope you've enjoyed this course, and I look forward to seeing you again shortly. Then, I will rejoin you for the final class of the program, MKT 498, Integrated Marketing Strategies.
